Centrist Beats Peronist For Presidency, Ending Junta Rule in Argentina

By Jackson Diehl Washington Post Service

BUENOS AIRES - Reul Alfonsin, the Radical party candidate, stunned Argentine political professionals and his own campaign strategists by winning a 52percent majority in Sunday's presidential election, easily ahead of Italo Luder of the Peronist party, who won 40 percent.

In the biggest victory in the 92-year history of the center-left Radical Civic Union, Mr. Alfonsin gained an assured majority in the national electoral college and an eight-seat margin in the lower house of the Argentine Congress.

Iraq Says It Destroyed 3 Iranian Ships
BAGHDAD (Combined Dispatches) — The Iraqi high command said Monday that its navy and air force had destroyed three Iranian naval vessels near the Iranian port of Bandar Khomeim at the head of the Gulf, and two others had been wrecked by Iraqi mines around the port.

Other Iranian ships "fled in a terrified state" and strayed into a mined area, where two of them were sunk by mines, the command statement added. It did not say when the attacks were carried out. Baghdad announced in mid-October that it had mined the entrance to the port and warned all shipping to stay away from the area.

Meanwhile, the foreign ministers of the six-nation Gulf Cooperation Council arrived Monday in Qatar for a two-day conference to discuss ways of ensuring freedom of navigation in the Gulf and the stepping up of mediation efforts to end the Iraqi Iranian war. At the United Nations, the Security Conneil called for an immediate end to the war and affirmed the right of free navigation and commerce in international waters.

Ruling for U.S. Newswoman Reversed

KANSAS CITY, Missouri (AP) — A federal judge ruled Monday against a former Kansas City television anchorwoman, Christine Craft, in her sex discrimination case, and granted her former employer a new trial on a six-person jury's finding that the company had defranded her.

Miss Craft, 38, had sued Metromedia Inc., the former owner of KMBC-TV, claiming that she was demoted in Angust 1981 because she was not attractive or deferential enough to men. Metromedia was found guilty of fraud and told to award Miss Craft $500,000 for telling her she was hing hired for her formalistic skills.

was being hired for her journalistic skills.

U.S. District Judge Joseph E. Stevens upheld the jury's award, but the company then asked him to reduce the award or grant a new trial. The judge ruled against Miss Craft on the sex discrimination part of her case, and scheduled a new trial for Jan. 4 in Jophn, Missouri.

U.S. Court to Rule on Land Reform WASHINGTON (UPI) - The Supreme Court agreed Monday to decide on the constitutionality of a land reform program that is similar to programs the U.S. government has supported in El Salvador and other erdeveloped nations,

The justices agreed to hear an appeal by the state of Hawaii of a case involving a plan to force owners of large estates to sell property to poor tenants. State officials have noted that 22 persons control 72.5 percent of the property on the island of Oahu. But the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled in March that such a land program was unconstitutional.

The program, which has only been implemented on Oahn, allowed state officials to condemn property and then sell it to tenants, lending up to 90 percent of the purchase price. The program was opposed by the trustees of the estate of Bernice Panahi Bishop, granddanginer of King Kamehameha, one of the largest landowners on Oalm. She and other landowners argued that the state was prohibited from coademning land solely to resell it to other private individuals.

Reagan Signs Social-Programs Bill

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Ronald Reagan signed a bill Monday appropriating $9 billion more for social programs than he requested. The $104.4-billion appropriations bill for fiscal 1984, which began Oct. 1, covers the departments of Health and Human Services, Education and Labor.

At a ceremony closed to reporters, key members of Congress watched Mr. Reagan sign the bill, whose passage 11 days earlier marked the first time in five years that Congress had sent the president a formal appropriations bill for the three departments.

Previous efforts to pass such a bill were frustrated by fights over funding for abortions and other sensitive matters, so programs covered by the bill have operated under temporary, stopgap spending bills since 1978. Mr. Reagan has insisted that the U.S. budget deficit, which topped $195 billion last year, be curbed through cuts in domestic programs.

U.S. Expected to Ease Polish Sanctions

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is expected to announce soon that it will remove some economic sanctions it imposed against Poland after Warsaw declared martial law in December 1981, 45. informed sources said Monday.

The sources said the sanctions to be lifted are the ben against Polish fishing in U.S. waters and the refusal by the United States and its allies to discuss renegotiation of Poland's $26 billion in debts to Western banks and governments. Poland's finance minister will be invited to a meeting in Paris to discuss the debts, the sources said. The ban on Export-Import bank financing for Polish imports and the suspension of Polish air landing rights will not be lifted now, they added.

The sources said the administration would lift some sanctions now because Poland released some of the prisoners detained earlier this year and allowed Rose John Beni II to riving and allowed Pope John Paul II to visit.

New Food Stamp Rules Aim to Eliminate Fraud

By Robert Pear

New York Times Service WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration has drafted a comprehensive set of rules that would make it easier for the government to reduce or eliminate food stamp benefits for many households.

The stated purpose of the changes is to simplify the regula-tions, to "reduce fraud, waste, and abuse" and "the duplication of benefits among federal programs."

The new rules, obtained from sources in the federal Food and Nutrition Service, would expand the definition of income used in calculating benefits. As a result, officials said, many people receiving insurance company payments for medical bills, welfare benefits, or home energy assistance would get smaller allotments of food

The rules would also make it more difficult for a destitute family to obtain expedited service in an emergency. At present, families with less than $150 in monthly income and less than $100 in assets are entitled to receive food stamps within five days of applying.

The rules would require states to investigate whether food stamp applicants had bank accounts. When possible, the states would have to compare the names of applicants and recipients with the names of people with funds on deposit at local banks to find those who had understated their assets

 Under one proposed rule, people could not receive more than 99 cents in change after using food stamps to buy food at a grocery store. They would have to "purchase additional food" or "return some of the selected foods" to make their purchases coincide with the face value of their food stamps.

In a preamble to the new rules, the Food and Nutrition Service acknowledged that this provision will create some inconvenience for recipients and grocers." But it said "reduce abuse of cash change," which poor people might spend on nonfood iten

Robert E Leard, administrator Party Moves to Break of the service, said the rules would be issued before the end of the year. He declined to discuss details of the Agriculture indicate that 90 percent of food stamp recipients have an income at or below the poverty evel, which was $9,862 for a family of four last year. Forty-seven per-cent of the recipients are children Nine percent are elderly.

Representative Ted Weiss, Democrat of New York, said the rules would burden state officials with so many verification requirements that they would actually have less time to ferret out trand and "could do tremendous harm to the recipients of food stamps."

Explaining the reason for the recuirements, the rules say: "One in a every four food stamp cases is in cror with respect to benefit resount. These errors resulted in oproximately $1.3 billion in oversuance on an annual basis, or 10: and the contract of the contra on his life," Mr. McPhail said. Mr. McPhail left Grenada to return to Havana on Oct. 15, he said, and his remaining information has come, he said, from a statement issued Oct. 20 by the armed forces of Grenada. The statement said the Central Committee made a formal offer to Mr. Bishop Tuesday, Oct. 18, 10 continue as prime minister, and Mr. Bishop replied that "he would consider the offer but was not willing to talk."

The statement said that on Wednesday morning at 9:30 a crowd led by Mr. Whiteman, the labor leader Vincent Noel and two businessmen stormed Mr. Bishop's house. Soldiers guarding the road had instructions not to lire on the people, so they "broke through the barrier and stormed through the gates of the house."

By this account, Mr. Bishop then led the crowd to Fort Rupert, and despite efforts by the army to establish communication and negotiate the crowd's peaceful departure "declared no compromise, no nego tiations."

They then disarmed the soldiers guarding the fort and began to arm the crowd

They declared their intention to arrest and wipe out the entire Central Committee and senior members of the party and the entire leadership of the armed forces," the statement said. "At that point the revolutionary armed forces sent a company of soldiers to re-establish control of Fort Rupert.

Mr. Bishop and his group opened fired, killing two soldiers and wounding several others. The armed forces then stormed the fort, according to the statement, and Mr. Bishop, Mr. Whiteman and others were killed. The statement then said that the military intended to rule with a revolutionary military council until a government could be formed. What President Reagan says, that this was a Cuban-Soviet conspiracy, is untrue," Mr. McPhail insisted. For Opposition to Grenada Invasion

How Common a Market?

The European Common Market is less common than it looks. With the rise of protectionism around the world, some of the more imaginative impediments to trade are appearing on the borders among the EC's 10 countries. It is particularly striking because no part of the world has seen more evidence of the ability of trade to lift national prosperity.

When the Common Market was founded 25 years ago, it agreed to abolish, gradually, all internal tariffs. That process ended in 1968. But that leaves very much intact what the experts call the non-tariff barriers. All the mechanisms of border control remain in force throughout Western Europe. The long campaign toward uniform customs documents within the market still seems to be a long way from success. Lately there has been a good deal of amusement, except among the Dutch brewers, over the West Germans' refusal to let into their country any beer that does not fully meet their own highly restrictive beer purity law, which goes back to the 16th century. It has been noted that automobile prices are much higher in Britain than on the Continent, Conversely, video recorders are cheaper in Britain. Two years ago the European Commission had on file 300 complaints of protectionism in violation of market rules. Now there are 770. Recession is having the same effect in Western Europe as in most other places.

When the Common Market was founded, one reason was to duplicate the enormous and obvious advantage that the United States possessed in its own huge internal market. The Europeans made extraordinary gains for a time, and yet now progress seems to have slowed sharply.

The U.S. and EC economies are very similar. The combined population of the Common Market is slightly larger than that of the United States. But its economic output - GNP, measured in purchasing power — is slightly lower, about five-sixths the U.S. level. There is no obvious reason why the Common Market should not be fully as productive as the United States - no reason except the traditions of internal division, which have proved to be unexpectedly durable.

Perhaps that is not entirely unintentional. In Europe's politics over the past 15 years there have been repeated ripples of rebellion against fast economic growth. Everyone wants to be richer, but not many people want to live drastically differently. But you do not often get one without the other. The architects of the Common Market always felt that if the European movement could not maintain momentum toward greater unity, it would slide rapidly backward. That risk remains as great in the 1980s as

Disgrace in Foreign Aid

Something remarkable is going on in Washington. Congress will probably finish 12 of its 13 annual appropriations bills for fiscal 1984 before this year's session ends. Compare that with the customary budget logiams, which in the last two years required dumping most funding into one big "continuing resolution" so the members could go home. But if they can pass 12 bills this year, why not 13? Because the 13th is foreign aid. And thereby hangs a disgraceful tale. In four of the last five years, one or both houses have avoided putting the aid programs to a separate vote.

Aid is unpopular and burying it in a continuing resolution provides cover for the supporters. Little noticed, the essential work on aid is still being done by Senate and House committees. The effect this year will be a package of some $14 billion in grants and loans - about a third of it being economic and military aid for Egypt and Israel. But the total is no triumph. It is less than last year, and has been ever less each year. But $14 billion is a lot better than nothing, which might be the result of an open vote by the full Congress.

What has happened to the United States? Where is the spirit of enlightened self-interest found in the Marshall Plan? A survey by the year found that the public's desire to reduce foreign aid outranked the fear of nuclear war. The broad coalition that recognized the importance of aid is no more.

Clashing factions still struggle over how to divide the aid or whether to support abortion for population control plans. But all the while, total assistance is reduced.

Why? One reason is the difficulty of defining its benefits. Literacy has been raised, and infant mortality reduced, but few Americans are aware of it. The slow development of India's economy is far less obvious than Europe's dramatic recovery after World War II. Another reason is that more and more Third World countries have become competitors of U.S. industry. Finally, it is hard to support aid for suffering foreigners when aid for suffering Americans is being cut. A commission chaired by Frank Carlucci, the former deputy defense secretary, is about to report on the inadequacy of the U.S. aid effort. Its erosion flies in the face of the world leadership role that conservatives and liberals alike would have the United States play. That is the real shame in American foreign aid.

Eban on Begin's Resignation

It's impossible not to be moved by the human pathos of [Menachem Begin's] situation. But quite apart from his personal grief, my feeling is that his decision [to resign] was a judgment on the events of last year, especially the Lebanese war. There is a clear connection with the fact that the last year was clouded for all Israelis by a sense of transition from euphoric buoyancy to a feeling that this is not

At first it was believed that very far-reaching changes could be brought about, not only the strengthening of our security but also the establishment of stability in Lebanon, the consolidation of a government that would sign a peace treaty, the elimination of Syrian influence, the elimination of the PLO as a threat and the reduction of Soviet influence. The fact is, these objectives have not been achieved. — Abba Eban, the former Israeli foreign minister, interviewed in Newsweek

Europe's Indifference

There has been in Western Europe an indifference to developments in the Caribbean which was eventually bound to create tension within the North Atlantic alliance. Stability in the Caribbean basin and the Gulf of Mexico is important to NATO for two reasons. The first, and most obvious, is that if the United States is distracted by what it feels to be a threat in a more vulnerable area closer to home than Europe, it will have less time and effort to spend contributing to the security of West Europe or the Middle East. Secondly, in strictly logistical terms, the Caribbean basin and the Gulf of Mexico are important because in a European emergency at least 40 percent of all American supplies and reinforcements for Europe are destined to pass that way.

If the broad purpose of the Alliance is to be sustained and strengthened, these American preoccupations with Central American stabilty have to be more fully understood in Western Europe — Britain included. - The Times (London).

Nobody should rationally suppose that because the Americans launch a mini-war in the Caribbean against Mrs. Thatcher's wishes, so they will plunge into a nuclear holocaust against the entreaties of all the allies. That is dangerous nonsense.

ere is, however, a real sense in which the decision-making dynamics of the alliance has fallen out of true in the past few years, under the weight of European public opinion's alarm about the nature of this Washington adminis tration. The best long-term path for getting the relationship back in the balance must, we believe, lie via a concerted European approach toward its own defenses; more of an equal partner, less of a satellite.

- The Guardian (London).

Options in Lebanon

The opportunity for an honorable withdrawal may, in fact, have passed. It is tragic folly, however, to leave our men in Lebanon under the vulnerable circumstances that now exist. Practically speaking, the proximity, numbers and experience of Israeli forces give them a much better chance to put a lid on the current situation. Given the history of U.S. assistance to the Israelis, it is only fair that they be called upon to assist our marines.

— The Milwaukee Sentinel

If the choice is to pack up and leave, then the consequence easily could become a Syrian-Israeli war over Lebanon - in the short term less costly of American lives, of course, but risking in the long run an extremely dangerous U.S.-Soviet confrontation in which neither superpower feels it can afford to see its regional client humiliated, or even frustrated.

- The Atlanta Constitution.

FROM OUR NOV. 1 PAGES, 75 AND 50 YEARS AGO

1908: The Brilliant Mr. Wells

PARIS - "The War in the Air" is one of the most brilliant books Mr. H.G. Wells has yet written. It is discovered that every nation of the world has a secret fleet of airships in various stages of perfection, and that these are speedily set in action against one another. It is the framework of Mr. Wells' philosophy of modern life. He sees how, under the devastating influence of modern science, mechanism has outgrown the human mind. Society became vast and intricate while the individual was seen as simple and as petty. The whole thing is a picture of the monstrous absurdity of the human race in piling up an increasingly intricate and dependent civilization without co-ordinating the parts.

1933: Linking Pounds to Dollars

LONDON — Tuesday's papers confine their comments on the reported pegging of the pound and dollar chiefly to reproduction of very cautious official pronouncements. The gist of these is the admission that there is certainly some relation between exchange rates and war-debt payments, but warning is given that an exchange-pegging agreement would involve major questions of policy. Both political and financial quarters, however, are busily following up probable implications that might be entailed through the sterling-dollar link, and generally speaking seem to feel that the maintenance of a stable relationship between the two currencies would necessitate reorientation of the British monetary policy.

Damascus, Not Moscow, Calls the Shots

AIRO - In the Middle East now, each country is looking nervously over its shoulder at the others, trying to calculate what they will do next and how to respond. But rarely is there mention of the role of

When Moscow does come up, it is almost always in the context of a message to the United States. An argument for support of a national position is buttressed with a warning elieved sure to command Washington's attention - watch out or the Russians will win.

Washington seems intent on portraying Syria as a Soviet puppet. "Syria has become a home for 7,000 Soviet advisers and technicians who man a massive amount of Soviet weaponry," President Reagan said last week. But the assessment of both local officials and Western diplomats in Beirut, Amman, Baghdad, Cairo and Jerusalem is that Damascus is calling its own shots these days, a Syrian tail swollen with ambition wagging a cautions Russian doe.

Massive Soviet resupply of Syria has emboldened Damascus to assert long-standing ambitions in Lebanon

There is not a consensus, however, on whether Mr. Assad is maneuvering to force the United States out of the area or to force its acknowledgment of Syrian primacy. In Damascus, as elsewhere, it is said he is seeking to be treated by Washington as 'the other regional superpower," the equal of Israel.

So dark are the techniques of Syrian policy that little signs have to be studied to gange the wind. One was the fact that the Syrian president chose to declare Ambassador Philip Habib, the former special envoy, persona non grata on the unstated but implied grounds that he deceived Mr. Assad and broke promises.

But Mr. Assad knows too much about Western diplomacy to suppose that Mr. Habib spoke personally, without instructions from Washington. Despite the tough reaction to a personal offense, he has maintained contacts with the Reagan administrapoint without slamming the door. In the same way, a speech Mr.

Assad made to the graduating class of Syria's Military Academy on Oct. 6, the anniversary of the 1973 Arab-Israeli war, which the Arabs claim as a great victory, gives a hint of an ambivalent attitude toward Moscow. It was a belligerent speech, extol-ling the use of military force for "the good of the people" and calling for "martyr's blood." It contained risual denunciations of U.S. imperialism. Yon are foreigners," Mr. Assad said. "Our Arab issues are internal issues and you have nothing to do with them."

The one passage about the Soviet Union, however, praised the Kremlin only for its support of Arab causes, such as standing "at our side against

"Let us tell [the United States]," he said, "that we have our own issues and concerns and combating commanism is not one of them. In our opinion, communism is an ideology, which people can follow or discard."

That could hardly have pleased Moscow. It conditions "friendship" on Soviet support for Syria's air with no offer to reciprocate. Officials elsewhere in the region believe the Russians have to worry that Mr. Assad will reach an accord with the United States if the price is right.

the East-West conflict in local attitudes. Some, especially the oil-rich but weak states of the Gulf, fear the escalation of superpower confrontations in the area. Others, particularly Iraq and Syria, seem to be attempting the game of Eygot's late Gamal Abd el Nasser in seeking advantage by playing off the superpowers.

Iraq, whose president, Saddam Hussein, is Mr. Assad's main rival and enemy, is also getting a regular flow of Soviet military supplies for its war against Iran. There was a period when the supplies were choked off and Moscow was tilting to Iran, but that has changed again in response to the anti-Soviet stand now being taken Clearly, the Russians would like to break what one high official called the "American monopoly" of Middle East diplomacy now. They have not made much progress. But that does not mean the area's turbulence is not extremely dangerous. The United States has interests that go well beyond keeping Moscow at bay. The Middle East is especially rich in tronbles of its own, quite enough to en-danger the rest of the world whatever the Soviet Union is doing.

For the United States now has to the balance against a new collection of radical states and revolutionary movements that threatens the Middle Fast. As a first step in the process, the United States needs to recover freedom of action as a superpower by extricating the marines from the Beirut trap that makes the United States a hostage to Syria and its proxies. The emergence of Syria is the prime expression of a fundamental reshuffling in the Middle East. As radical nationalists, the Syrians enjoy the support of Moscow. Thus the Russians rebuilt Syrian armies after a bad beating at the hands of the Israelis in the Lebanese war.

Ideological harmony bestows upon the regime of President Hafez al-As-sad close ties with the Iran of the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini. Ayatollah Khomeini's revolutionary drive gives Mr. Assad the drop on several other Arab states.

Saudi Arabia, fearful of the ayatol-lah's religious fundamentalism, and of possible attacks on the cilifields, pays generous subsidies to Syria as rance against Iran. The Sandi tilt works to neutralize several countries ordinarily hostile to Syria - namely Iraq, Egypt, Jordan and the sheikh-doms of the Gulf.

Further freedom of action is conferred upon Syria by two other historic changes in the region. First, there was the destruction of the Palestine Liberation Organization as the prime sower of trouble in Lebanon. In its place there has sprung up a host of desperado forces hostile to the government of Lebanon. They in-

Then there is the Israeli withdrawal inside Lebanon, or redeployment, lead friends and allies in redressing as the Israelis call it. The pullback in Arab eyes looks like a sign of weakness. Since the United States, for once, did not force the Israeli move, the influence that accrued to Washington as the only possible rein on Israel also diminished —especially in the view of Mr. Assad. With so much to gain and so little to lose, it was inevitable that the Syrians and their friends would test their strength. That is why some who are normally partial to an assertive American posture in the Middle East began calling for an early withdrawal of the Marines. Though it is psychologically harder in the wake of the bombing, their withdrawal to a place that is not a magnet for attack is still

The next requirement is a coordi-nated political and military building. More U.S. forces will be required around the area, though not in Beirut or maybe even in Lebanon itself. The visit of François Mitterrand to Beirut suggests that the French will join with the United States.

The Israelis have the strongest army on the ground by far. They will have to be the spearhead of any move on the Syrians. So a tightening of lines between the United States and Israel is in order.

Lebanon, with an U.S. mediator off its back, can be counted on to offer some resistance to the Syrians. U.S. prodding can cause several other states to jostle Damascus. King Hussein, after all, knows that Mr. Assad has designs on Jordan. The Egyptians see in Syria a prime rival for leadership in the Arab world. Turkey knows Syriz as a source of deadly

U.S. Power Has Been Spread Too Thin

A diplomatic effort to cut short Iran's war of attrition against Iraq also makes sense at this point. The fighting is dangerous in itself, and if the Iranians can be put on the defendence. sive, the Sandis will feel that mucheasier about not supporting Syria.

The drill, once these moves are under way, is to dig in and sit tight. The Syrians and the Russians hold the initiative. But apart from roughing up Lebanon, there is not a lot they can do with it. Once the United States stands tough, they have no good choices in the Middle East. When that point asserts itself, the United States will once again be in position to negotiate —but not mainly with the Syrians, as the Arabists may urge. The Syrians have no interest in order, and Americans who have recently tried to deal — including. Ambassador Philip Habib and Robert McFarlane, the new national secarity adviser - have been swindled. No, this time the negotiations should be with the other superpower. For the Russians need a breathing space with the United States and have a lot to lose if the Synans plunge. #### A Needed Presence

Having listened to the comments of the various observers, politicians, and press commentators on French radio and television, on the future of the French military presence in Lebanon, I regret that apart from very rare exceptions — one being the Ambas-sador of Lebanon in France — the true reason of the presence had not been mentioned.

Beyond the legitimate sentimental motives that the French people have in supporting Lebanon, why not stress that the defense of Lebanon is part of the defense of the West in the ame way that the installation of the Euromissiles is.

Without forgetting Libya, the chief satellite of the Soviet Union in the Middle East is Syria, or more precisely the Syrian Alawite regime. Why is Moscow installing SS-21s on Syrian territory, which will be operated by Soviet technicisms? Certainly not to fight Lebanon, a country which neverattacked anyone in its history.

What a strange coincidence that:

the abominable aggression against French and U.S. soldiers in Berrit. took place the very same day as mu-merous pacifist mainlestations in Western countries. Some people were not willing to "Die for Da 1939. Are we now going to be told that it is useless to 'die for Berrut'. non and Grenada and what goes on elsewhere as a matter of military routine, we would be spread "too thin" by almost anyone's definition.

There is a further problem. At the core of Mr. Reagan's thinking, and not only his, is the idea that the stress and unrest in the world constitute an objective reality, something that exists independently and that is dangerous to the United States and that poses to us the unavoidable question what to do about it.

What is missing from this idea, among other things, is the companion idea that foreign policy requirements exist not only absolutely but relatively - threats must be perceived and measured against the resources on hand to meet them. This can mean the behavior of an ostrich, but it need not. It should mean prudence or, in Walter Lippmann's famous phrase, solvency: socing straight but not taking on more than one can handle. Some of us have leaned toward the

Lebanon engagement and away from the Grenada one. But my point is that nowhere is it written that either or both had to be done. Some part of what the United States does lies within the irreducible ambit of deeds that any president would probably feel elled to undertake. Some other part of a president's service to U.S. security, interests and comm -elastic notions all --- lies within the realm of his personal judgment. I lack confidence that the president and his advisers, official and unofficial, were looking at these possibili-ties in the round and doing some anticipatory arithmetic on their potential total costs and risks.

It is the difference between a reflexive president, who can keep us constantly stretched too thin no matter how fast and furiously we rearm, and a reflective president, who will slow down and try to ensure that the

Strong Dollar Hangs Over Reagan-Nakasone Talks

WASHINGTON — President Reagan's trip to Japan, which begins in a few days, will again raise the specter of the "Japanese problem" — the frustrating ability of Japanese companies to sell more things to Americans than they buy in return. Japan will probably run a trade surplus of more than $20 billion with the United States next year, mostly in manufactured goods. What U.S. officials do not like to mention is that the U.S. trade surplus with Europe for many years has been almost as large as the trade deficit with Japan. Moreover, because Japan does run a global trade surplus, and is likely to do so for years, there is a big capital outflow that enables Japan to be a major lender and investor abroad. This is the role that the United States and Britain once played. Nonetheless, senior aides to Mr. Reagan are urging him to take a tough line in his talks with Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakesone. The time has come for less talk and more action," said one Reagan administration official, who asserted argrity that public commitments from Tokyo for trade liberalization were subsequently ignored by the Japanese bureaucracy. U.S. officials claim that Japan persists in maintaining inspection and certification standards for imports that make no real sense -- except to block imports. There can be little doubt this is true, and Japan should quickly remedy the situation. Beyond that, Trade Representative William Brock and Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige By Hobart Rowen

Japan must agree to "a sense of reciprocity" in its trade with the United States. By that they mean that Japan must provide the same relative access to its markets that Japan enjoys in the United States.
This sounds reasonable — but it is tricky. As William A. Niskanen, a member of the president's economic advisory council, has said, the United States has every right to demand a "national treatment standard" - meaning that American companies in the Japanese market must be treated no better or worse than Japanese firms, and that Japanese firms must get similar treatment in the United States. But that is not the same as demanding that American firms get the same treatment in Japan as Japanese get in the United States: Everyone has different institutions, and we Americans cannot impose ours - for example, a distribution system -- on the Japanese, even if we think it is better and more open.

But the major argument between Mr. Reagan's advisers and those who think he will be making a mistake to adopt a hawkish posture in Tokyo revolves about this question: Is Japanese intransigence on trade the primary factor in the swollen Japanese surplus with the United States, or is the real problem the overvalued American dollar?

According to a study by the U.S. General Accounting Office, the dollar has appreciated about want Mr. Reagan to persuade Mr. Nakasone that 21 percent against the yen in the past three years.

That means that the prices of American cars and other goods, relative to the price of Japanese products, have risen by close to 21 percent.

U.S. officials come up blank when asked by how much the U.S. trade deficit with Japan would be reduced if all of Japan's tariff and nontariff barriers were cut away. But Gary Saxonhouse of the University of Michigan, a specialist on the Japanese economy, estimates that if all barriers were climinated, lapan's trade surplus might be redu by $2 billion to $3 billion. If even two-thirds of that were to benefit the U.S. trade balance, Japan would still retain an overwhelming surplus.

As Philip Trezise of the Brookings Institution

said recently, neither country's political agenda calls for dramatic economic policy changes that would ease the basic tensions. Mr. Nakasone is not anxious for the kind of fiscal stimulation that might pash Japan into an inflationary cycle. And Mr. Reagan, in advance of an election, is trying to make believe that the budget deficit, which triggers high interest rates and an overvalued dollar, is not

That leaves both countries trying to solve a major economic dilemma by dealing with fringe issues that tend to polarize feelings: auto quotas in the United States, and beef and citrus quotas in Japan. 65 Who Fought Alongside Republicans Tour Battlefields, Meet La Pasionaria

By Nina Damton

MADRID - Forty-five years 130, members of the Abraham Lincoin Battalion stood on the parade round in Barcelona listening to La Pasionaria, the fiery, inspirational speaker of the Spanish Civil War.
When the olive tree of peace puts forth its leaves again," she said, "mingled with the laurels of the Spanish republic's victory -

Recently, some of them did. In the first organized visit of the International Brigades since the civil war, 65 veterans returned to Spain for a tour of the old battlefields. For many it was a sentimental return and, in a way, the reunion was a belated victory celebration.

"The Spanish republic finally was victorious, if you take the historic view," said Herman Rosenstein, a retired electrician from Santa Monica, California. They've accomplished what we tried to accomplish. They've formed a solid democracy." The trip was organized by Tom Entwhistle, an American from Rockford, Illimois, who lives in Spain. It was sponsored by the privately financed Center for International Studies in Madrid.

'Cats': A Big Meow On Budapest Stage

By Alexandra Shelley utonal Herald Tribune

B UDAPEST — "There has never been such a success in Hungary since World War II," the director Tamás Szirtes says of his latest production, "Macskak" more commonly known as "Cats"

- which opened at the Madach Theater here in March and has already filled the theater's 869 seats for the first few weeks of the new

For those without the patience to wait at least an hour to buy a ticket in advance, there is a brisk black market business, and during the hubbub before performances, police try to keep order among enthusiastic ticket-seekers.

'Cats," the musical by Andrew Lloyd Webber, is not the only recent Western play that has taken Budapest by storm. Contemporary plays from the United States and England constitute some of the biggest successes here, attracting a large portion of the annual total of five million theatergoers, who, thanks to government subsidies. can see a play for the equivalent of under S1.

Because nationalism and theater have traditionally been intertwined in Hungary, the production of such plays as "Cats" stirs debate here. Modern Hungarian plays often veil criticism of the past and of daily life in allegory or abstraction, and are criticized by some in the theatrical community as esoteric and

But the theaters are for the most part free to produce Western plays don't require that they think." that directly face some of the same political issues, often soon after their Western premieres. As they filter through the interpretations of directors, designers and cast - and the expectations of the audience they take on Hungarian color.

Lloyd Webber came to Budapest last season to see the third production of his play after London and New York and its first staging in a proscenium theater. The British composer, Szirtes explains, was also interested to see how well the play - and T.S. Eliot's verse stood up when translated into a different culture.

Over the last five years, the Vigszinház largest of Budapest's 19 professional theaters, has put on Joseph Heller's "Catch-22," Ken Kesey's "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest," Peter Shaffer's "Equus" and "Amadeus," and Bernard Pomerance's "The Elephant Man."

One of the four directors at Vigs-zinház. Péter Valló — working this season on Woody Allen's "Play it unfinished.

Again Sam" — ascribes the influx of Western drama to increased "in-

These include grants that allow Hungarians to tour Western theaters, the unofficial resource of the more than five million Hungarians who live outside the country, and the activities of the Hungarian Center of the International Theater Institute, which distributes foreign plays and publicizes first nights from around the world.

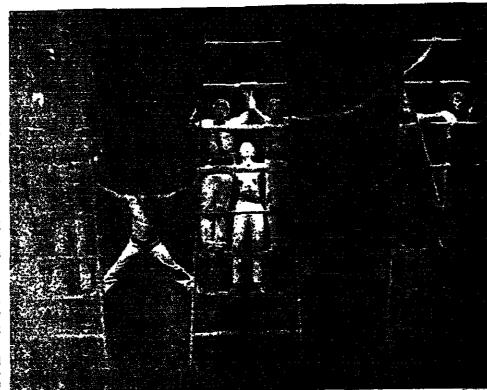

The popularity of English and American plays stems partly from the fascination with things Western, augmented by the prohibitive costs of travel to the West, and a lack of objective media coverage of daily life in these countries.

But a more fundamental appeal may be the universal dilemmas addressed frankly by many of the English and American plays, which a Hungarian play might cloak in metaphor. "Now we're more inter-ested in the problems of individuality," says the young, bearded Vigszinház director Desző Kapás, who directed "Catch-22," "The Elephant Man," "Equus" and "Amadeus." "On a psychological level, these plays are full of life, full of blood, of sense and heart."

One director suggests that the dismantling of the Solidarity union in Poland led many Eastern Europeans to be skeptical about similar movements and apathetic towards politics as a whole. "Nowadays people don't like political themes in the theater," he says. "They only want musicals or love stories which Kapás, on the other hand, suggests that the younger Hungarian playwrights address themselves "to very few people, mostly to the intelligentsia." But there are some exceptions. Traditionally, Hungarian theater has been permeated by what Valló calls "quasi-historical plays," which avail themselves of a historical situation to draw parallels with current politics. One such play is the rock ballad "Köműves lemen" which opened at the Vigszinház's chamber theater. Pesti, in 1982.

It was written by Imre Sarkadi, who, the director Laszlo Marton says, tried three times to finish his drama in the early 1950s. "Sarkadi was torn," says Marton. "He had repressive Rakosi regime that eventually perpetuated the 1956 uprising. Sarkadi committed suicide in 1961, leaving "Köműves Kelemen"

"Kömüves Kelemen" is a rock ballad based on a Hungarian folk tale.

The play is based on an old Hungarian folk tale in which 13 masons sacrifice the wife of one of them to appease the spirit of the land so that they can complete their public duty of building a fortress.

"Everyone here knows the play deals with that time," says Marton. referring to the Rakosi era. "There is no human being who has the right to sacrifice another human being. You can sacrifice yourself for moral or political points of view, but not another - that is

The popularity of "Kömüves Kelemen" belies the idea that contemporary Hungarian drama tends toward the intellectual exercise, and that entertainment must be imported. "We are never going to be able to play an American musical like Americans," says Marton. "But we can play 'Kömüves Kelemen' as no one else can." However. its conscious attempt to use old and new Hungarian motifs to popularize a political philosophy is ununu-

"Keysearchers," written in 1975 by István Orkény, one of Hungary's most popular playwrights, is typical of this genre, an absurd play riddled with grotesque humor. Its hero, a pilot who has accidentally landed his plane in the city ceme-tery, finds himself locked in an apartment with five other characters who are all somehow affected by his mistake. By the end of the play however, they are convinced — as is the pilot — that this disaster was really a show of great hero-

But only Orkeny's preface to "Keysearchers" explicitly refers to Hungarian history, to the propaganda that cloaks defeat in the colors of victory: "We are dealing with a small nation and its people, with those whose fate larger forces had always controlled. Therefore my hero, this ordinary soul who accepts and transfers failure, is none other than a pilot, whose re-sponsibility extends only to the safe landing of a passenger's plane.

. . .This small failure can be exnined in its minutest details and is thus more comprehensible than, let's say, a Waterloo." The flight of Orkeny's critical imagination was hampered by "larger forces" during his lifetime. He died in 1979 and, according to his English translator, Clara Gyor-

> Plays that are less metaphorical than "Keysearchers" are sometimes mired for years in the offices of the municipal council or the national ministry before permission is granted for their production. One director called it "an absurdist situation — nobody knows why in 1982 we can't play something and in 1983 we can." Yet most directors and actors say that they can't remember the last time a play was formally banned under the relatively liberal government of Janos Ka-

In fact, the government provides incentive for the production of such Hungarian plays as those of Orkeny. Since every theater is sub-sidized by either the municipal council or the national culture ministry, only 40 to 50 percent of their costs must be covered by hox-office receipts. To some extent this frees the theaters from the tyranny of popular taste, which favors a "Cats" over a "Keysearchers."

But the mechanism of the subsidy imposes the preferences of the council and ministry on each theater's repertoire. Profits from such commercial successes as "Cats" are given back to the government. which then awards supplementary Hungarian drama

By Jeffrey Robinson

PALM BEACH, Florida — It was all very serious.

None of that rainy Sunday afternoon dining-roomtable kind of Monopoly. This was the real thing.

Nineteen national champions from as far away as New Zealand and Peru, Finland and Kuwait, plus the reigning world champ, assembled here recently to put their buying, selling and haggling skills on the line for the title of World Monopoly Champion.

The game is sold in 32 countries and translated into 19 languages, and with such a prestigious title at stake, the hallways at the Breakers Hotel here were filled with people discussing the finer points of the game.

This year's contest contained several two-time veterans, which suggests there really must be more than dumb-blind luck involved. One of the skills is, obviously, negotiation. At times during the championships, the bidding was so fast and furious you'd have thought Sotheby's was selling a Monet. (The Kuwaiti mpion once offered his opponent an all-expenses paid trip to the actual place on the board in exchange for a property card.)

The objectives are simple: Drive your opponent into poverty, bury him in mortgages, insist that he pay his debts when he lands on your hotels, and then, with great class, gloat openly as the bank repossesses every-

The Australian won his title in a women's prison in Sydney, where the national championships were held, perhaps inspired by the instruction "Go to Jail, Directly to Jail." The English champion, 14 years old and the tournament's youngest player, proved his skills in Britain by defeating a real estate agent, a chartered surveyor and a mortgage banker. The West German played for his national title at a match held on top of West Germany's highest mountain. The Italian is a self-taught addict who says he learned his game technique by playing alone, managing the money, the properties and the trades for all five players.

After three elimination rounds, five players, from Austria, Australia, Peru, Venezoela and Britain, were left. Greg Jacobs, 32, a real estate agent from Perth. Australia, was runner-up at the last championships in Bermuda in 1980. "The best colors are the properties on the board between Jail and Free Parking," he says. "But the important thing is not just get those, you must also have enough cash to do something with

He claims there are three distinct phases of the game. "To play well you have to understand when each phase begins and ends. There's the opening phase, the middle game and the endgame. For example, the four railroads are important only in the opening part of the game. They don't mean a lot later

The second finalist, Helmut Pfeifenberger, 22, a Viennese student who represented Austria, agrees. There is of course luck involved, but that can only take you so far. After that it's all negotiation and entration. My favorite properties are Boardwalk and Park Place, and all the greens."

Peru's champion, Jose Vasquez, 24, a law student from Arequipa, favors the orange properties; Luis Antonio Auyanet Farias, 17, of Caracas, prefers the railroads, Boardwalk and Park Place.

According to the British champion, James Mallett of Gloucester, "The best colors are definitely orange. Once you've got houses to build, get rid of the railroads and the utilities. I train 10 hours a week, every week. And I think you've got to buy everything you can. Then you've got to negotiate with your opponents to get the best deals while making them think that

World champion Jacobs: three-pl

Before the final round, the five contendants drew their playing pieces, by lot, and with each piece came a prize, the life-size version of that piece. There was a real car, a real horse, a top hat with $100 bills stuck on the brim, a wheelbarrow filled with money and a live

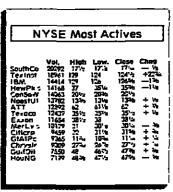

Then they got down to serious business. The players wore tracedos. They sat around a large table, with interpreters and judges. It was a fight to bankruptcy,

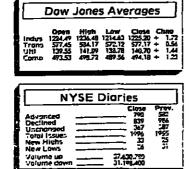

The first player out was the Austrian. Then the Venezuelan fell. With only three players left in the game, the Australian seemed the favorite, as he had property built on Boardwalk and Park Place, although for a while it looked as if the young British player might be able to come from behind.

Then disaster struck. James Mallett ran out of cash, and then out of luck. He landed on Greg Jacobs' monopoly and with tears building up in his 14-year-old eyes, he left the table. Half a dozen throws of the dice later, the Peruvian realized that he too was beat-en, gallantly extending his hand to Jacobs to concede

First prize was a shopping spree on Worth Avenue with $10,000 worth of cash — all Monopoly money, accepted this once at all the shops on the block. Jacobs bought a scarf for his wife, a stuffed animal for his son and then spent the rest at a local stockbroker buying General Mills shares. The company happens to own Parker Brothers, who happen to own Monopoly,

Despite Turmoil in Coffee Industry, One Farm in Brazil Is Doing Well

CAMPINAS, Brazil — The rainy season has begun on the São João do Atibaia piantation in Campinas, the center of Brazil's most productive coffee growing region. Next June, at the start of the Brazilian winter, the skies will clear and the leaves will have fallen from the plants, leaving behind branches of bright red berries, each pod containing two beans that a cooperative will sell to roasters, processors and trading companies.

Like most everything else in the Brazilian economy, there is furmed in coffee. Growth of world consumption has stalled and world prices have nearly stabilized. Production is erratic and costs — fertilizer, wages, farming equipment — keep rising.

In addition, various forms of government support to agriculture are being withdrawn with the re-sult that some of the country's coffee growers have switched to soybeans, cattle and sugar cane. The latter is favored by the government because it is used to make the alcohoi that fuels most of the cars now

Out beyond the simple single story home of Miguel Adolfo Ribeiro, the farm's manager, the view is of tall pine trees and rolling hills of coffee plants, all define ated by concrete fence posts painted white with blue caps and strong with barbed wire. The fences are for the bony Brahmin calves that are bred here and then

"It's important to have the right conditions," he said. "You have to give food to the coffee. I use a lot of natural fertilizer from the cattle - 20 liters per tree and 450 grams of chemical fertilizer. Some people use twice as much chemical fertilizer and don't get this kind of production."

Mr. Ribeiro says that he harvested 3,000 60-kilogram bags of "good, clean coffee" this year from the farm's 90,000 trees. Last year the weather kept the harvest to 1,500 bags, but the year before Mr. Ribeiro collected 3,012 bags. "I haven't any problems," Mr. Ribeiro said. "I sell the coffee well I sleep well."

After the harvest. member countries meet in London and set the year's prices, the amounts of coffee each country can sell and the amount to stockpile to maintain supplies during bad harvest years. Under this year's agreement, Brazil is allowed to export 16 million bags of its total crop of 29 million bags —or 28.6 percent of the organization's total exports of 56 million bags. It was also allocated 1.5 million bags to try to sell to countries, mostly Eastern European, that do not recognize the coffee agreement.

and 4.5 million will be stockpiled.

During the July 1982-to-June 1983 harvest year, the Brazilian Coffee Institute says, Brazil exported 17.2 million bags valued at about $2.2 billion. In the year, the average monthly price for Brazilian coffee rose from $1.38 a pound to $1.43, a rate of gain that is expected to continue Brazil would willingly grow a lot more coffee, but per-capita consumption worldwide has been falling. World consumption for the fiscal year that ended in September was estimated at 31 million bags, up slightly from 80 million the year before and 79 million in 1980-81.

Mr. Ribeiro is as addicted to coffee as most Brazilians. When he has the time, he says, he has a little coffee made thick and sweet in tiny cups every hour during the day.

Mr. Floos made the admission to an environmental hearing held in this town on Cornwalks Island about 970 kilometers (600 miles) north of the Arctic Circle to discuss the ideas of the companies involved for producing Beaufort oil

The total bill for the development schemes put forth at the hearing came to $60 billion. This would require large amounts of oil revenue. but that possibility seems to be fast receding. Evidence of the changed view is a skittishness among smaller companies involved in the Beaufort. Canterra Energy, for instance, recently pulled out of its small share of Gulf Canada's $75-million well in the Pitsiulak region. "Until results show forth, the Beaufort will not command the high profile it once did," said Ian M. Doig, an oil analyst in Calgary,

In the expectation of a bonanza by the mid-1980s, the principal companies operating in the area - Dome, Imperial Oil and Gulf Canada - three years ago asked the Canadian government to begin a major review of the environmental effects of a huge program to pump and ship the oil. So far, the companies say they have spent $20 million, and the government several million more for the the review. Hearings are being held across the Canadian Arctic.

Sales to the U.S. government during the first nine months totaled $2.5 billion, up from $2.3 billion during the like period last year. Boeing delivered a total of 161 airplanes during the first nine months, compared with 126 a year earlier. Among the deliveries this year were 20 757s and 42 767s, both new, fuel-efficient passenger jets. T.A. Wilson, Boeing's chairman, said that based on current programs and schedules, the company projects $11 billion in sales for 1983. Mr. Wilson said the company's backlog of unfilled orders as of Sept. 30 totaled $17.5 billion, up from $19 billion at the end of 1982. McDonnell Douglas said its profit for the third quarter climbed to $70.9 million, or $1.78 a share, from $55.5 million, or $1.40 a share, a year earlier. Revenue rose more than 11 percent to $2.04 billion from $1.83 billion. For the nine months, profit rose 25 percent to $192.3 million, or bitter merger squabble that began Aug. 25, 1982, when Bendix made a hostile takeover bid for Marietta and ended two months later with Allied taking over Bendix and acquiring a 38 percent stake in Marietta.

Marietta, a Bethesda missile maker, said it paid $250.7 million to reaquire the final block of its shares held by Allied, to fully regain its financial independence.
In all, Marietta has paid an estimated $346 million, or $53 a share, to buy back the 38-percent stake held by Alfied. Although Allied, a giant chemical and oir concern based in Morris Township, New Jersey, had been Manietta's biggest stockholder, Allied had limited rights to vote its stock, sell the shares or buy more.

The money for the buyback came from proceeds of a common stock offering Marietta held

The final block of Manietta shares acquired from Allied amounted to 4.65 million shares (before adjustment for a 3-for-2 stock split on Oct. 17). In August, Marietta reacquired a 1.8. million-share block from Allied in a transaction valued at $95.4 million.

In the merger battle itself, both Manietta and Bendör, a Southfield Michigan aerospace and automotive parts concern, ended up owning shares in each other.

Under a peace settlement negotiated by Al-lied, Marietta last December sold back the en-tire 50-percent Bendix stake it had acquired in its counter-takeover effort for Bendix. At the and the same time, Marietta bought back a portion of the 70-percent Marietta stake Bendix had acquired in its hostile takeover attempt.

Mesa Group to Solicit Shareholders To Fight Gulf's Reorganization Plan

AMARILLO, Texas — Mesa Petroleum Co. and its co-investors in Gulf Oil Corp. have filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission preliminary proxy materials to solicit other shareholders against Gull's reorganization proposal, Mesa said Monday. Holders are to vote Dec. 2 on the proposed reorganization.

Mesa is exercising rights under Pennsylvania law to demand access to Gull's list of shareholders and certain other corporate records. Gulf is incorporated in Pennsylvania. Lehman Brothers, Kuhn Loeb Inc. has been retained as financial adviser to Mesa and the other investors.

Mesa has said it opposes changes in Gulf's structure that would make Gulf a Delaware corporation and eliminate cumulative voting rights for Mesa and the other investors in its group have said they plan to spend $1 billion buying Gulf stock. The group already owns slightly less than 11 percent of the shares outstanding, a figure that could permit the investors to secure one seat on the Gulf board at next May's annual meeting.

U.S. Machine Tool Orders Rise 14%

WASHINGTON (Renters) - U.S. machine-tool orders rose to $156 million in September, up 14 percent from $137.3 million in August and 80 percent from $86.9 million in September 1982, the National Machine Tool Builders Association said Monday.

Orders for metal-forming tools rose 15 percent last month to $3.4 million and were up 56 percent from September 1982, the association said. It said metal-cutting tool orders rose 13 percent to $102.7 million, or 95 percent above the year-earlier level.

The September backlog of unfilled orders totaled $1.06 billion, down from $1.52 billion in September 1982 the association said. It said industry shipments rose 19 percent last month to $134.4 million from $113 million in August but were 51 percent below shipments a year earlier.

Matsushita VTR Pact With Europeans TOKYO (Reuters) - Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. has reached

basic agreement with the European electronics companies Philips and Grundig to supply them with technology to make VHS-format video tape recorders, Matsushita said Monday.

It said Philips, of the Netherlands, and Grundig, of West Germany, which manufacture the Philips-developed V2000-format recorder, asked Matsushita to provide the VHS technology. Matsushita said the details were not yet agreed upon. Industry sources said the Europeans' move followed slow sales of V2000 recorders because of poor picture reproduction. Their share in the

MELBOURNE (Reuters) - Broken Hill Proprietary Co. and Vickers Lave agreed in principle to merge the heavy-engineering division of Commonwealth Steel Co. with Vickers Australia Ltd. to form a new listed company to be called Comsteel Vickers Ltd., the parent companies said

A Broken Hill spokesman said BHP and Vickers would each own about 40 percent of the company and the public would own about 20 percent. He said the deal excluded Comsteel's stainless flat products division, which will be sold to another BHP unit, John Lysaght (Australia) Ltd., at a price still to be determined.

Vickers holds 66 pct of Vickers Australia's issued and BHP owns 86

Honda to Aid Chinese Cycle Factory

TOKYO (Reuters) - Honda Motor Co. has signed an agreement with China's Sichuan Xinguang Industrial Product Import and Export Corp. and the Jialing Machine Factory of Chongoing under which Honda will the factory produce Honda-designed motorcycles to be sold in na, Honda said Monday.

said the seven-year agreement would allow the factory to build 70cc corcycles initially and 125cc cycles later with components supplied h Japan. Initial output, starting next spring, will be about 100,000 prcycles a year, Honda said.

he factory has produced 50cc motorcycles of its own design at a rate 100,000 a year since receiving technical assistance from Honda in Sember 1981. The agreement provides for the factory to pay yen

PEC Body Sees Slump in Oil Market

NICOSIA (Reuters) -- OPEC's market monitoring committee sees a possible deterioration in the oil market in the 1984 first quarter that could be as serious as the market's decline in the 1983 first quarter, the Middle

Market developments could eventually make the defence of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries' prices more difficult, especially after the 1984 first quarter, the newsletter quoted the committee as saying at a meeting in Vienna last week.

"It said increasingly uneven reporting of oil production data by OPEC members posed serious problems for the committee. OPEC output estimates for the third quarter ranged between 17.85 million and 18.33 million barrels a day, the newsletter said, adding that Saudi Arabia apparently had reduced production in the second half of October from the level in the first balf of the month.

Plan to Build Engine For Airbus A320 Gets Go-Ahead From Group

By Bob Hagerty

LONDON - A group led by Rolls-Royce Ltd. of Britain and U.S.-based United Technologies Corp. has cleared a major obstacle in its plans to develop an engine for a new generation of 150-seat airlin-

The group, which also includes West German, Italian and Japanese companies, said Monday that the U.S. Justice Department had decided not to challenge the legality of the plan, which is expected to cost more than $1 billion. The enin early 1988.

Within the next few weeks, the group plans to set up a joint ven-ture called International Aero En-

Sir William Duncan, chairman of Britain's state-owned Rolls-Royce, described the project as a model for the recession-wracked aerospace industry. "The whole industry has to look more and more at collaboration as a way of life," he said at a press conference.

Howard Mager, an aerospace analyst at the New York securities firm of Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette, called the Justice Department decision a key step but said the group still must prove that it can line up costomers for the engine.

The V2500 is being designed especially for a proposed 150-seat airliner, the A320, being considered by Airbus Industrie, the consortium owned by aerospace companies in France, West Germany, Britain and Spain. The British and West German governments have not yet decided whether to help finance the A320.

Sir William said the engine plan "is not essentially and uniquely dependent" on approval of the new Airbus model. The engines also could be used on jets of similar size being considered by Boeing and McDonnell Douglas.

The new engine would compete head on with the CFM 56-4, to be produced by a joint venture of General Electric of the United States and France's Société Nationale d'Enude et de Construction de Moteurs d'Aviation. Because it is merely a modified version of an gine, to be known as the V2500, is existing engine, the CFM 56-4 scheduled to be ready for delivery would be considerably cheaper than the V2500, Mr. Mager said. But, he added, the V2500 probably would have the edge in perior-

Britain Propses To Tighten Iaw On Tax Havas

LONDON — The povernment has drawn up proposes to close a loophole through wich British companies use tax harens to evade British tax, the Inlind Revenue said Monday. In publishing a revised draft of proposals to be conidered form-clusion in the 1984 fnance bill the department said the planned egislation would make British clupa-nies liable, starting in April 1984, to corporation tax on profis from their interests in British-distrolled

Obviously, a big discovery coureverse the equation, but last year's conclusive results were worse than this year's inconclusive ones. Five wildcat wells were completed last year to test unexplored formations. Only two encountered oil, and only one found enough to generate any enthusiasm. That was the Netlerk structure, covering 90,000 acres and needing further appraisal. That Dome success, however, was overshadowed by the disappointment of the Tarsiut formstion, where an evaluation well last year failed to find any oil. Mr. Hoos said that if the well had proved successful, Dome would have had a billion-barrel oilfield instead of its present estimate of 350 million barrels.

Mr. Hoos said that would be enough to be commercial in milder environments, but he added that, in combination with three other fields, ranging from 5 million to 200 million barrels, ome type of development migh be possible oner that most analysts expected. The prevailing view has been that it would take at less one big find to allow for the construction of a transportatio system that would permit over-il Beaufort development to preed.

"We're now looking at ways of optimizing recovery from a group-ing of mall fields," Mr. Hoos said. "Thee are several options availableio us."

It is considered likely that Texas Instruments will allow independent software companies the 99-4A without threatening with a machine selling for more than $1,100. It was a failure. Only late last year, when price wars and less expensive parts brought the price down to $200, did sales start to soar. TI was an eager participant in the price wars, believing that a low price gained market share and that the higher volume that resulted

When the big loss was announced last quarter, Texas Instru-ments said it would stay in the business. William J. Turner, the head of consumer operations, resigned in July and was replaced in late August by Peter A. Field, a general manager of Procter & Gamble's coffee division. The company also cut the price of expansion devices for the computer, and sales of those grew rapidly.

But the efforts did not work. On Sept. 20, Mark Shepherd Jr., chairman of Texas Instruments, said again that the company would remain in the home computer busi-ness, but added that "success is by no means certain."

WHEN Emily, in "Our Town," is allowed to relive one day in her short life, she picks no great special occasion but just an ordinary day, her 12th birthday. "Light" is the story of one ordinary day in the life of Claude Monet, and it too glows with the beauty, the miracle of being alive.

It begins as the great painter gets up to row out to the Seine near his place at Giverny. "In the bluegrey hush before dawn overhanging trees met their mirror image in still grey water.

He thought he had perhaps an hour

Cool colours only, blue fading to mist grey, smooth now, things smudging, trees fading into sky, melting in water. No dense strokes now, bright light playing off the surface of things, small, playful. I have broken through the cavelope, the opaque surface of things."

As the day wears on, different voices speak: Monet's wife, his stepdanghters and grandchil-dren and servants and other members of his huge and complicated household, each one absorbed in the immediate demands of self, each full of thoughts. There is conversation, of course, but even at hunch, a big family meal with the usual domestic clatter, where guests argue and Monet wields his heavy personality with patriarchal gusto, the effect is curiously

All through the book, people remark upon the light in their revenes. Light becomes one of

We know those poplars from the Mone paintings. We recognize the fily pond and the bridge and other sites, and anyone who ha read about Monet and his marvelous garden of Giverny can pinpoint almost the exact time that this is supposed to be late July or Angust 1900.

I think even that rare reader would be moved by these beautifully crafted 91 pages. Because we don't really need to know it is Monet; it is enough to see into the mind of an artist painting portraits of life itself even while he is in it midst, surrounded, overwhelmed by it, by the riotous flowers, by the loves and griefs and flitting concerns of the people about him, but the evanescent light that he takes them.

And light — light that he races to reproduce the canvas, working for only a few minutes each day at the same hour — is what this books and the canvas, working for only a few minutes.

each day at the same hour—is what this books and is about the moment illumined, the precious quicksilver instant that is the stuff of our existence, and the heroic madness of the artisty who tries to capture it. who tries to capture it.

Greenbacking the Olympics By Steve Harvey Los Angeles Times Service

LOS ANGELES - Elizabeth Bellus posed with official Olympic Trash Bag Plastic Liners. Margaret Word cradled the official Olympic Thimble. Ed Quilty dialed the Olympic Commemorative Telephone From the group of retail sponsors and licensees whose royalties will support the 1984 Olympic Games, it was obvious that the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee, in the absence of government sponsorship, had done a thorough job of coming up with support from

But not too thorough. Spokesman George Broder pointed out that last week's gathering included 30 sponsors and 53 licensees, while "Lake Placid [site of the 1980 Winter Olympics] had 280 sponsors and over 100 licensees. The Los Angeles games, Broder said, will lack an official vacuum cleaner, official mop or — steroids controversy or no — an official urine-specimen bottle, as Lake Placid could boast. Still, Sam, the Olympic eagle mascot, was plastered on hundreds of products, from beer mugs to playing cards to the 200 assorted pins that covered Pete Peterson's hat and vest. Peterson's company hopes to sell 10 million variations of the ever-smiling bird. Curiously overlooked in the commercial imagery was Los Angeles itself. Rudy Escalera's commemorative plate included a silhouette of city hall and a greeting-card company had a few postcards of a rare smogless Los Angeles skyline (the night shots are best). Otherwise, none of the items displayed gave any hint of where the 1984 Olympics

Sandy Weiner held up the $5,500, diamond-studded Olympic Pocket Watch, which appeared to be three hours fast. "Oh," Weiner exlained. "It's set for New York time."

WASHINGTON — Every time something serious happens, my relatives from around the country call me to find out what is going on. They do this on the false assumption that someone who lives in Washington must know more than they do.

Last week was a busy one. Cousin Ziggy, who is a nervous Nelly when it comes to the Caribbean, said, "Why are we landing in Grenada?*

"Of course it has a foreign policy. You can't be a superpower without having a foreign policy." "What is it, then?" Cousin Ziggy

"Our foreign policy is not to have one."

"What does that mean?" "If the other side knows that we have no foreign policy, then the Kremlin thugs have no idea what we'll do next. Up until recently when a president spelled out a for-eign policy, the Soviets immediately worked out a policy to counteract it. But now they're as confused as the American people as to what our objectives are, and they're climbing the Kremlin walls."

Death of a Child

A Father's Goodbye to His Daughter,

Dead of Cystic Fibrosis at 8

By Michael Keman · Washington Past Service

WASHINGTON — A lot of 8-year-olds have died of cystic fibrosis. But Alexandra Deford happened to have a father who was a sportswriter, and the book he has written about her is a song for all the children who die, for all the families who mourn

It is a short book, 196 pages: "Alex: The Life of a Child," short like her life. It is not an objective book, not objective at all.

Always before when she left [Yale-New Haven Hospital], Alex would laugh and say something like this to Barbara: "Ökay, I'll see you the next time they make me come back to this stupid old place." But this time, before Barbara knew what hit her, Alex said only, "Good-bye," and threw her arms around her. To Cyd, alone, the night before, in her room, Alex said, "Good-bye forever," and then, to a new nurse, one she liked but hadn't grown that close to, Alex was almost matter-of-fact. "I'm go-ing home to die now," she said, "but don't you tell my Mommy or Daddy because it'll upset them."

Dedicated to Dr. Thomas Doan at Yale-New Haven and to "all the volunteers and professionals who work for the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation," the book manages to do what all the posters and appeals have never done: It makes that dry mouthful of syllables a real and immediate horror, a thing that invades a household and takes it over, dominates lives, swallows them up. The first enemy is the mucus, which comes out of the lungs every day by the cupful. It has to be pounded out, the way a baby is burped, only in this case the pounding goes on for half an hour every morning, so the horrendous, strangling coughs won't come so often during that day.

At night, in her infancy, Alex slept under a tent with a mist machine. At the end she needed oxygen and finally, when her die. But what it's like to be 8 ... with research advanced the life and die." Deford, 45, a 21-year veteran of Sports Illustrated with six books under his belt, knew he was going to write something when Alex was only 2, when she had seemingly got over her crisis-ridden infancy and was living a more or less normal life, if you didn't count the mist machine, the medicines, the daily inhalation treatment and the poundings.

Frank Deford "wanted to tell . . . how graphic dying is. Not like the movies where they don't really die."

"I started taking notes," he said, "but I was kidding myself. I wrote them for our son Chris, too, who was older. I called it the children's diary, and I wrote a preface to myself explaining why I was doing it. At the time I hoped it would all have a happy ending."

Thirty years ago, a child with cystic fibrosis couldn't expect to live to kindergarten. It is a white person's disease, the white version of sickle-cell anemia. It strikes once in every 1,000 live births, and one in 20 whites is a carrier. For some years, steady progress expectancy year by year. Then, in the 1970s, a limit was reached in what could be done with better maintenance techniques and antibiotics.

"It was only later, gradually, that the realization came. I was a trustee for the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation by then, and I knew there was nothing out there in the woods. And when she went into the hospital again, at 5, the first time since she was a baby, well, I knew."

Whatever people would like to believe, knowledge like that doesn't bring a family together. He and his wife Carol didn't talk about it. They had a silent agreement: When one of them started to cry, the other wouldn't rush to comfort but would back off, or they would both be crying. It was how they survived, he says. Occasionally Deford's assignments took him away from their Connecticut home for weeks at a time, but his wife had no such respite. Having quit college to become a model before she married she entered mursing school in Alex's early years, but had to break that off when the child's disease grew more demanding. Eventually Carol found a flexible program at Sarah Lawrence College that enabled her to get away a little from the constant struggle.

There were wonderful moments for the whole family: brief trips, Broadway shows, the excitement for Alex of being the Connecticut poster child for the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation and meeting celebrities. A bright child, pretty, vivacious and funny, who loved to dress up, loved cosmetics and bracelets and earrings ("you could usually hear her coming rattling like Marley's ghost"). But toward the end, the disease took over all their lives.

"She knew her pathology better than the doctors," he said. "Sometimes she would act like a brat deliberately, to get Carol annoyed with her, to get her out of the room and spare her."

The family has survived. Carol Deford went on to get her master's in social work. Christian, now 14 and a freshman in high school, wants to be a baseball player, has grown up to be skeptical of adults and their claims but also is deeply caring ("I gave him a copy of the book and he didn't read it for a while, but now he's starting to"), and there is an adopted daughter, Scarlet, 3, from the Philippines.

"Carol talked me into that. She was right. Scarlet is Alex's legacy. She sleeps in Alex's bed. Oh, there are flashbacks. They'll continue till Scarlet is 8, I suppose."

I see her friends getting older, I see her with them, and at the same time I am crying out that they must stop. Please, please! Each time I see Wendy or Aimee or any of them earing older it hurts me more, for they are the most direct links I have with Alex, they are the contemporary connection. Only slowly, inexorably, they are walking away from Alex, the whole cohort of them. Alex is forever 8, and now they are 11, then 12, soon 13.

Writing this book brought it all back, the memories that normally would be fading by now. It was a mission, he says. "She would have done it. She's an example to me. She lives inside me always. She's my hero.'

U.S. Scientist Thinks Herod's Tomb Located A California physicist believes

he has located the tomb of Herod the Great within the base of an ancient tower in the Indean hills south of Jerusalem. Herod the Great, who lived from 73 B.C. to 4 A.D., is known as the ruler who ordered the slaughter of infant boys in Bethlehem in an attempt to thwart the predicted Messiah. He also known as builder of the Second Temple at Jerusalem and other major works, including the spectacular fortress at Herodium, where he is thought to be buried. Lambert Dolphin, a geophysicist with Stanford Research Institute International in Menlo Park, California. said that during this summer his seven-member team working at Herodium found a secret chamber in the base of a large tower, previously thought to be solid. He said he believes this is the long-sought tomb. The California team used rock-penetrating radar, sonar devices and electrical seismic resistivity equipment similar to that used by oil and mineral prospectors.

The Brazilian balladeer Jesse Santos won first place Saturday in the most prestigious song competition in the Latin American world as the 12-year-old festival made its debut in the United States. Singing a homage to Charlie Chaplin entitled "Paper Star" that he composed himself, Santos surpassed vocalists representing 21 other countries. An estimated 200 million people around the world viewed via satellite the three-hour Spanish-ianguage program of songs introduced by President Ronald Reagan in Washington and capped by a 20minute finale by the opera star Placido Domingo.

The publishing magnate Waiter a H. Annenberg has pledged $12 million to a 119-year-old private school in what officials say is the largest single donation ever given to a U.S. high school. Anneaberg. an alumnus of the Peddie School in Hightstown, New Jersey, and a former U.S. ambassador to Great Britain, said he was making the gift to express his gratitude to his alma mater and to help improve secondary education throughout the United States. The coeducational school enrolls 510 students who pay $5,350 a year in trition. More than half are boarding students who pay another $3,300.
